The Queen Who Couldn't Hake Ginger

The queen who contan't Hake GingerMarch St. Nicholaz.

The King of Macaroni got up one morning and sat on the edge of his bed.

The Lord Chamberlain stood before him, and handed him his stockings, one of which had a great hole in the heel.

The stocking was artfully turned so that the hole should not be visible to his majesty's eyes, and though the King generally didn't mind a ragged stocking as long as he had pretty boots, this time, however, the hole attracted his attention. Herrified, he tore the stocking out of the Lord Cham-berlain's grasp, and poking his forefinger through the hole as far down as the knuckle, he remarked, with a sigh, "What is the use of being a king, if I have no queen? What would you say if I should marry?"

"The idea is sublime, your msjesty," the Lord Chamberlain said, humbly. "But do you think I shall easily find a suitable wife?" asked the King.
"Good gracious, yes! ten to one," was the reply.

"Good gracious, year ten to one, was the reply.

"Don't forget that I am not easily satisfied. If I am like the Princess, she must be very wise and beautiful. Then there is another and very important condition. You know how fond I am of gingerbread!" There is "the a person in my kingdom who There is n't a person in my kingdom who understands how to bake it—at least, to bake it to a turn, so that it is neither too hard nor too soft, but just crisp enough. The condition is, the Princess must know how to bake gingerbread."

The Lord Chamberlain was terribly frightened on hearing this but he manused

The Lord Chamberlain was terribly frighteaed on hearing this, but he managed to say that, without doubt, such a princess could be found.

"Very well," said the King; "suppose we begin the search together." And that afternoon, in company with the Lord Chamber lain he visited all the neighboring sovereigns who were known to have spare princesses to give away. Among them all were but three who were both wise and beautiful—enough to please the King. And, unhappily, none of them could bake gingerbread!

When sileance had been restored the eldest daughter, with an air of curiosity, said:

"Well, pa, I really would like to know what the Apostle Paul said."

"Pass the mustard," said the pastor sternly.

And now the question is: What did the Apostle really say that Rev. Mr. Philacter could have so curiously construed? Or is it the New Version?

A young girl deeply regretted that she was so colorless and cold. Her face was too white and her hands and feet felt as though the blood did not circulate. After one butle of Hop Bitters had been taken she was the rosiest and healthiest girl in the town, with a vivacity and cheerfulness of mind gratifying to her friends.

asked her, made up a dreadful face, and said angrily, "There is not a princess in the world who can bake gingerbread—gingerbread, flowed?"

The King fared worst when he asked the third Princess, though she was the wisest and fairest of all. She gave him no chance to ask his question; even before he had opened his mouth, she demanded if he could play on the trombone. When he ask could play on the trombone. When he ask chowledged that he could not, she said that she was really sorry, but she could not mary him as he wouldn't suit. She liked him well enough, but she dearly loved to hear the trombone played, and she had decided never to marry any man who couldn't play it.

The king drove home with the Lord Chamberian, and as he stepped out of the carriage he said, quite discouraged, "So we are about as far in our plans as we were lefore."

However, as a king must have a queen, after a time he sent for the Lord Chamberian frat ime he sent for the Lord Chamberian sent of the lord care. When he had resigned the hope of marrying a princess who could bake gingerbread. "I will marry the Princess who can bake nice little simple the lord care." As for the King, he strode up and down the room rubbing his hands. "It is fortunate that my wile can't make gingerbread," he thought, gleefully, "for if she could, what should I have answered when she said that I couldn't play on the trombone?"

The more ke thought, the more cheerful he became. He whistled a favorite tune, looked at the great picture of his wife over the mantel, and then, climbing upon a chair, he brushed away a cobweb that was dangling over the nose of the Queen.

"How angry she must have been, poor little woman!" he said at last. "Suppose I see what she is doing."

He stepped into the long corridor into which all the rooms opened, and it being the day when all things went wrong, the groom of the chamners had forgotten to light the entry-lamp, though it was eight o'clock at night and pitch dark. The King went groping forward, with his hands stretched out for lear of falling, when saidenly he touched something very soft.
